

Normative Power

Virtual Special Issue

Manners, Ian

Publication date:
2010

Document Version
Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Citation for published version (APA):
Manners, I. (Ed.) (2010). Normative Power: Virtual Special Issue. Routledge. Journal of European Public Policy, No. Virtual Special Issue

General rights

Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the public portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognise and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.

- Users may download and print one copy of any publication from the public portal for the purpose of private study or research.
- You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain.
- You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the public portal.

Take down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact rucforsk@ruc.dk providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Journal of European Public Policy

Virtual Special Issue

Normative Power

Guest editor:

Ian Manners, Roskilde University, member of JEPP editorial board

The social sciences have many different understandings of 'normative power', but in European Union (EU) studies normative power has three particular meanings. The first meaning of normative power is its emphasis on normative theory, that is, how we judge and justify truth claims in social science. The second meaning of normative power is as a form of power that is ideational rather than material or physical. The third meaning of normative power is as a characterisation of an ideal type of international actor.

Empirical studies of normative forms of power have analysed both the causal and constitutive effects of EU relations with the world in areas ranging from inter-regional relations, through traditional diplomacy, to environmental politics. Research areas of particular interest include the study of the interplay between physical, material and normative forms of power, as well as the constitutive role of normative reflexivity in the EU's international identity through its global engagements.

The normative power approach is emerging as a holistic research programme with the potential to cross both policy and disciplinary boundaries in the study of the EU's status in, and relations with, the rest of the world. Within this research programme, the greatest challenges involve analysing both the causal and constitutive effects of EU principles, actions and impact in world politics.

Since the first article on the EU's international identity in 2003, JEPP has published more highly cited articles on the EU's normative power than any other academic journal, including a special issue on "What Kind of Power?" in 2006. As the leading journal in the debate, this special issue brings together seven normative power articles published in JEPP since the 2006 special issue, together with Ian Manners' 'Normative power Europe reconsidered' article. These articles illustrate the way in which JEPP serves as a central point of reference for normative power research and debate in a wide variety of public policy areas. Included in this research and debate are questions regarding how best to analyse and understand EU international leadership, small state strategy, interregional relations, international compliance, and the management of globalisation, concluding with an ontological and methodological appraisal of the normative power research programme. This special issue will be of interest to public policy researchers, analysts, lecturers and students in their search for an understanding of the EU's normative power in world politics

Normative power Europe reconsidered: beyond the crossroads

Ian Manners

The political economy of 'normative power' Europe: EU environmental leadership in international biotechnology regulation

Robert Falkner

Norm advocacy: a small state strategy to influence the EU

Annika Björkdahl

Empowering Africa: normative power in EU–Africa relations

Sibylle Scheipers and Daniela Sicurelli

Fake, partial and imposed compliance: the limits of the EU's normative power in the Western Balkans

Gergana Noutcheva

Globalizing European Union environmental policy

R. Daniel Kelemen

Europe and the new global economic order: internal diversity as liability and asset in managing globalization

Orfeo Fioretos

Forthcoming: Normative Power Spotting: An ontological and methodological appraisal

Elisabeth De Zutter