Research Areas:

My research focuses on two broad areas: a. the governance of EU regulatory governance politics specifically areas that are based on science such as food and agricultural policy, biotechnology, circular economy and sustainability. My core interest concentrates on the role of international institutions and actors in EU multi-level governance, decision and policy-making processes and the impact of the actors' collaborations on developing the relevant policy instruments for effective and sustainable solutions. b. My second research area is the role of social movements and interest groups as agents of change and legitimization of policies within the European Union and global public sphere. This research provides a different perspective to top-down hierarchical forms of governance and investigates how social initiatives (organised or not) contribute to sustainable solutions with respect to the economy, food, agriculture, environment, circular economy and biotechnology.

Service to the Profession:

Reviewer for Journal of Common Market Studies, Journal of European Public Policy, British Food Journal, Public Administration Review, Journal of European Integration, Regulatory Governance, Scandinavian Political Studies, Business and Politics, ECPR book Series, Oxford University Press
