Research Interests

My principal research interest are in two main areas 1) political institutions and comparative politics at the national level (electoral systems, electoral behaviour, political parties (new political parties) and party systems, parliaments and governments. A key concern of my work in this area is what implications party-competition - and institutional structures that facilitates this - has for the quality of democracy. 2) The politics and institutions of the European Union. I have worked on Danish parties and elections to the European Parliament as well as legislative processes in the EU (comitology) and institutional rivalry in the EU.

Teaching

I have taught subjects within the following areas: research methodology (qualitative and quantitative), political theory and comparative politics and government, government, EU and European politics and Italian politics.
