

Research

I am a PhD Fellow at the Department of Social Sciences and Business. I participate in two research groups, i.e. Power, Identity and Critique as well as Social Dynamics and Change. Furthermore, I am engaged in the Center for Gender, Power and Diversity that is an interdisciplinary collaboration at Roskilde University. My research interests include human rights law and discrimination/inequality, particularly stereotypes, stigma and bias, as well as constitutional law. In my PhD project, I analyse some new tendencies in case-law from the European Court of Human Rights regarding stereotyping.

Teaching

I teach on the English courses Human Rights and International Law for the Social Sciences, as well as some Danish courses on human rights law, administrative law and legal sociology. I supervise projects on human rights law, international law, EU law, UN regulation, constitutional law, administrative law, legal sociology, legal theory and legal feminism.
